Cha Cha Moon Restaurants, London, United Kingdom

At a first glance, the Cha Cha Moon restaurants in London could be described simply as noodle bars. However, Cha Cha Moon has committed itself to a classic and regionally very diverse type of Asian cooking that goes far beyond the usual Chinese noodle soup and dishes.

For a company with several restaurants, operating under a uniform concept and name, it is essential that all the cooking processes can be precisely reproduced in every respect in order to fulfil high quality standards. The large quantities of noodles, which are used for a wide variety of dishes, require the highest precision when it comes to preparation. In addition, equally high requirements are set in terms of volume, energy consumption and flexibility.

The ELRO Series 2300 pressure brat pans and cookers were the optimal solution for Cha Cha Moon Ltd. right from the start. For one thing, their multifunctionality makes preparation of an average of 1,000 meals per day considerably easier. Furthermore, extremely short pre-heating times to the desired cooking temperature have proven especially advantageous for this often, quite hectic work.

As Debbie Hickinson sums it up, «Our kitchen equipment has to be adaptable to the clearly defined work flow in our restaurants – not the other way round. ELRO appliances fulfil this requirement impressively.»
